Preschool children's spatial memory for self and other. The authors examined whether 2- to 4-year-old children remember information about self in a spatial task. The authors used a virtual environment that allowed children to explore an array of objects on 3 screens, one for each of the children (self), one for a confederate (other), and one for the examiner. The authors used a global memory test, a place recognition test, and a description task to examine children's memory. The children's spatial memory was greater when describing the array to a live experimenter than for a computer. The authors found that the younger children remembered significantly more information about the self than about the other, but by 4 years of age children did not differentiate between the other and self conditions./* * Copyright (c) 2017, 2018, Oracle and/or its affiliates. * * All rights reserved. * Redistribution and use in source and binary forms, with or without modification, are * permitted provided that the following conditions are met: * 1.
